Description

The Beacon EP is a hark back to Bolus's 2014 EP "perceived redness of an evening sky" and the track "Pump", utilizing rhythmic drones and sequenced soundscapes and culminating in a more percussive departure from his usual sound in the final track "Gottingen".

Once again, these compositions represent Bolus's take on soundtrack work but this time with actual films in mind:

"Martyrs" was perceived for the 2008 film of the same name, "Black Light" for the "Leviathan Configuration" of the LeMarchand box as it rotates above the labyrinth in Hellraiser II, and "Gottingen" for "A Beautiful Mind", channelling Bernhard Riemann, a 19th century mathematician and alma mater of the University of Gottingen, Germany.

About the artist

bolus makes structured noise and soundscapes interspersed with percussion, found sounds and field recordings.

"I have varied interests ranging from film, art, mathematics and science through to field recording and sound collecting, which all influence my work in one way or another.

I sometimes create music while picturing an imaginary scene from a film which ties in with my desire to make soundtracks and to create films of my own. I love modulating soundscapes and drones, as well as playing with monumental reverbs. "

Some of the influences:

- Rechenzentrum
- Pan Sonic
- Sunn
- Raster Noton (Senking, Alva Noto, Kangding Ray)
- Autechre
- Oliver Huntemann
- Merzbow
- Melvins

bolus allows himself the creative freedom to take the sound in whatever direction interests him at that point without worrying about genre or previous style.

bolus is also known as Nullva.
